Bond lawyers with Norton Rose Fulbright hold up boxes containing personal protective equipment (PPE) used by people working with cryptocurrency mining machines as they walk along the street in Tokyo, Japan March 7, 2020. REUTERS/Toru Hanai RBI Clearing, an independent correspondent bank to the RBI, had handed over the money on behalf of Nasdaq-listed Bitfinex in exchange for a pre-order of a corporate bond, or a so-called repo, according to a copy of a repo agreement document seen by Reuters. The document, signed on March 11 and signed by the RBI Clearing member and state-owned Central Bank of India, said that the money was to be used to finance assets owned or controlled by Bitfinex, such as blockchain-related companies. Both the RBI and the Central Bank of India referred to the document, which contains confidential details of how Bitfinex's cryptocurrency-related businesses are financed, as the RBI repo agreement. "The funds are being held by the banking group to provide counterparty credit exposure until the RBI's resolution plan to sell BITFINEX 3RD (A) INC. went into effect," said the document, referring to Bitfinex's majority shareholder, iFinex. "The banking group confirms that the funds have now been released in full and are available to Bitfinex from the banking group," it said. RBI Clearing did not respond to a Reuters request for comment. The Central Bank of India said: "We are not aware of the ex-factory agreement." "In the near future, we will release funds to Bitfinex
