We investigated the antitumor immune response induced by an adenovirus 5 vector expressing a fusion protein of IL-12 (AdIL-12) in tumor-bearing mice. Injection of AdIL-12 with CpG markedly inhibited the growth of EL-4 lymphoma. BALB/c mice immunized with AdIL-12 plus CpG showed drastic tumor suppression. AdIL-12-mediated tumor regression was associated with the release of a TNF-alpha/IFN-gamma-dependent immune response. When CD3+ T cells were depleted, AdIL-12/CpG inhibited tumor growth but did not induce Th1 polarization. The tumor regression in this system was associated with NK-

like activity mediated by TNF-alpha/IFN-gamma production in NK cells. These data suggest that the antitumor effect of IL-12 is NK-dependent.
