(2) Description of Prior Art The manufacturing techniques of integrated circuit devices are continually improved to increase the number of circuits that can be fabricated on a single chip. These circuits include, but are not limited to, memory cells for reading and writing binary data, data processors and control circuits that perform logic functions. The speed of operation of these devices is enhanced by combining circuits that are fabricated on a chip to produce a larger circuit that can perform more sophisticated functions in a faster amount of time. The circuit density of semiconductor devices is increased by decreasing the size of individual device components. The continuing decrease of the minimum feature size, F, within the devices requires increased control over the lithographic process used to define the feature size. Generally, the minimum size, F, is determined by the wavelength of the lithographic process, ♦ 3e33713323
