MINNEAPOLIS - It took a few seasons for Minnesota to get the true returns on its investment with the 2014 class, but once the recruiting cycle opened up for 2015, it was virtually impossible for the Gophers not to add impact players to a roster that was still light on experience. The Gophers did add some depth, though, but when it came to replacing the production the Minnesota offense lost when quarterback Mitch Leidner went down, the program also needed to be better than it had been the last two seasons. To do that, it leaned heavily on one of the most well-regarded high school prospects in the country. Junior defensive end Jaylon Johnson was one of the biggest prizes in the 2015 recruiting class. At this point, the Gophers need little introduction to the massive junior who continues to hold his own against a much larger group of players in the Big Ten. The 6-foot-4, 270-pounder was a four-star prospect back in July 2014 and he's already changing the Minnesota football scene as he enters his junior season. What's in store for Minnesota this season? Let's take a look around the state of Minnesota to see what Johnson and his teammates have in store. Q: Facebook sharing a page without open graph page? BANGKOK — A lobbying group in Thailand named after a 13th century Sukhothai leader is demanding the government explain why it removed him from a list of heroes. This week the National Assembly announced a change of heart and restored the name of Bhit Wanan Sukakul, one of Thailand's greatest generals and military rulers, for a new park in the Thai capital. The move is a timely one, since the military government is in the midst of taming a long-running insurgency in the far north of the country. The crisis erupted in 2004 with the assassination of then Prime Minister Thaksin Shinawatra, who was seen as a friend of the Muslim insurgency. Since then, the military government and its supporters have portrayed themselves as a bulwark against Islam, which they blame for their troubles. And their opponents say the solution lies in restoring Buddhist rule to the north, where Muslims make up an estimated 40 percent of the population. "The National Assembly cannot allow the military to forget its history and erase the contributions made by the Sukhoth

I don't understand English well, I hope you'll understand me. A: I suspect that the block in the middle is being cut to size before being glued to the side. This invention relates to a process for producing a catalyst useful in an industrial purification of ethylene oxide by hydroperoxidation, as well as to a catalyst produced by the process. In the industrial purification of ethylene oxide by hydroperoxidation, the hydroperoxidation is usually conducted by bringing an ethylene oxide containing stream into contact with a catalyst in a reactor together with an oxygen-containing gas in the presence of a heavy oil or a paraffinic solvent such as kerosene or gas oil at a temperature of about 100.degree. C. The ethylene oxide thus obtained as a crude product is further purified by distillation. By this purification, a purified ethylene oxide is obtained from which the ethylene oxide is recovered by distillation. The heavy oil or the paraffinic solvent used for the above hydroperoxidation have been expected to be recovered from an aqueous solution containing organic sulfur compounds such as mercaptans. By recovering the organic sulfur compounds contained in the liquid phase after the hydroperoxidation from the aqueous solution containing the organic sulfur compounds, the organic sulfur compounds can be converted into hydrogen sulfide by the catalytic action of a suitable compound such as Raney nickel or platinum to be used as a source of hydrogen to be supplied to the subsequent steps for producing a purified ethylene oxide. The aqueous solution containing the organic sulfur compounds is usually obtained by cooling down the crude ethylene oxide obtained by the hydroperoxidation, separating the organic sulfur compounds from the lower layer of the crude ethylene oxide by distillation, and then water treating the recovered organic sulfur compounds by a suitable method. As the method for recovering the organic sulfur compounds from the aqueous solution containing the organic sulfur compounds, there has been known a method in which the aqueous solution containing the organic sulfur compounds is recovered by settling, the separated aqueous phase is heated to decompose the organic sulfur compounds, and the resulting product is treated with activated carbon to obtain the organic sulfur compounds. On the other hand, there has also been proposed a method in which the organic sulfur compounds in the aqueous solution are extracted with a suitable organic solvent, and the solvent extracted with the organic sulfur compounds is recovered from the solvent and reused. The catalyst recovery method
